India Myles is all alone in the world after her father dies. She inherits the family cotton farm and is desperate to continue her father's legacy. However, it is proving hard to garner the respect of the workforce. Her exquisiteness, once her pride and joy, is now a hindrance, as men are only interested in what she can provide... the farm.

Picard Reeves, a local wealthy landowner, sets his sights on India and all she can offer. He proposes his hand in marriage, but Picard is mean-minded, overweight, and old enough to be her father.

When India refuses him, Picard's true character is exposed. She cannot marry this detestable man and escapes, hitching a ride with a wagon train heading West for Wisconsin.

Not one to be dissuaded Picard sends his cousin's son after her, with strict instructions to bring her back so that he may marry her and seize her property.

Will India escape Picard's evil clutches, or will she find the happiness she truly deserves?
