Coke Stop in Emo is an engaging, often funny account of a 7500-kilometre solo canoe trip from Montreal to Vancouver that author Alec Ross completed between 1987 and 1989. He followed the lake and river routes pioneered by indigenous Canadians and later used by the voyageurs and fur traders of Canadian history. Alec's wilderness adventures included (among other things) ferocious storms and encounters with curious bears. But he also met scores of people, from native trappers to Alberta farmers, who taught him about everyday life in places that most Canadians rarely visit or even think about. Legendary Canadian author Farley Mowat declared Coke Stop to be "a great yarn" and a Globe and Mail reviewer described the author as "Chaucer in a Tilley hat." The Kindle edition contains minor updates to the original text published by Key Porter Books in 1995.
