This book is a vivid piece of work by Indian author Saurabh Pant that focuses recent forest fires as the core of its entire context as a key concept note in form of a poetry collection.

Priya Verma once again provides an impressive set of photographs to match the poems in the entire work.

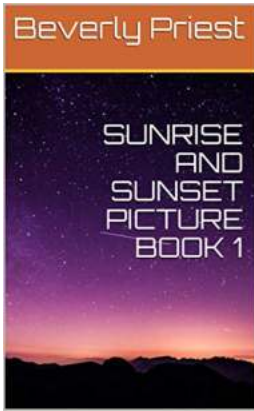

An eBook that speaks the volume by which humans have damaged the forests, the way they keep burning them and not realise what they have done, and mainly what consequences it has resulted in have been brought to light by the author within the entire collection of poems itself.

The work covers some famous forests known for their pride and are now no more, because they burnt by human ferocity. The author has made it clear why it has happened, for commercial interests. It is a work of worthy note for which hopefully it's a well typed work in all respects.
