One of the oldest known instances of this curse is found in Greek mythology, with the tale of Narcissus and Echo. Narcissus, known for his unparalleled beauty, rejected the love of Echo, a mountain nymph. In turn, the heartbroken Echo called upon the gods to curse Narcissus, ensuring he would only find completion through his own reflection. This curse ultimately led to Narcissus's tragic demise as he fell in love with his own image.

One such story is that of Orpheus and Eurydice from Greek mythology. When Eurydice was mortally wounded and taken to the Underworld, Orpheus embarked on a perilous journey to bring her back. Despite the warnings, he successfully appealed to Hades and was granted a chance to return to the mortal realm with Eurydice. However, there was one condition - he must not look back at her until they had both reached the surface. Unfortunately, consumed by doubt and unable to resist temptation, Orpheus glanced back, losing Eurydice forever.
