“Ran around and started finding me until I found her.

Now that I found her, I found her curled up in a corner, & covered with dirt.

Bruised & bloody. I tried to approach her, but she flinched.

I tried to touch her, & she put her arms out to shield herself as if I was dangerous.

Speaking softly, she listened. Inexplicably sizing me from head to toe.

Through watery eyes, she said “It’s time.”

Mirror is the depths and the ending of Prisoner in My Thoughts with more quotes, love, and heartbreaking with self-discovery poems. Depending on her intuition and listening to her body as the writer submerges into the pool of depression with barely holding on, she decided that “ENOUGH IS ENOUGH.” This book is a full visual of the writer begging and pleading for the road to end the pain and suffering with hopes of redemption. Mirror is a reflection of the writer’s thoughts as she moves forward with self-healing. Further giving the readers a glimpse of how it feels to face their own personal deepest yet darkest moments in the mirror.
