COLLECTED HISTORY ON DOUGLASS HIGH SCHOOL, TABOR CITY, COLUMBUS COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA, BEFORE SEGREGATION ENDED

Patricia A. DeWitt, a Douglass High School salutatorian, Class of 1966, has curated historical records capturing glimpses of school year histories for what began as Tabor City Negro School. Established in 1915, school year records began with the 1938-1939 school year. The school was later renamed Douglass High School after the esteemed abolitionist and orator Frederick Douglass.

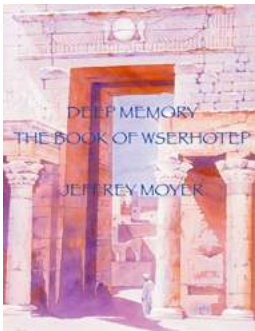

This book was created as a tribute to this school, its students, and to its educators that affected so broadly and stood so proudly in the Black community of Tabor

City, Columbus County, North Carolina. Ms. DeWitt collected information from digital records, old documents, and classmates to create glimpses into school and student school year achievements. From humble beginnings through school consolidation following the enactment of the Civil Rights act of 1964, Douglass High School was deeply embedded in its community, and roots in the form of alumni are now spread coast to coast.
