Dangerous Terrains and the Call of Buntings

The allure of buntings is so strong that some birdwatchers have ventured into treacherous terrains, braving rugged mountains, dense jungles, and desolate deserts. The pursuit of buntings has led them to the remotest corners of the Earth, where they face countless dangers, from steep cliffs to poisonous creatures.

The Birdwatcher's Mysteries: Book Five

"You don't have to be a bird lover to fall in love with Christine Goff's charming Birdwatcher's Mysteries." Tony Hillerman

Rachel Wilder hasn't seen any of her friends from Elk Park in over two years, when she's asked to join them at a birding convention in Georgia.

She's not quite sure who's more excited - she or her boyfriend, Kirk Udall, an investigative reporter. It turns out the keynote speaker at the birding convention is Guy Saxby, the subject of his latest investigation.

Rachel soon realizes that her first mistake was agreeing to dig up information on the renowned birder. Her second mistake was involving her friend Dorothy MacBean.

Dorothy enthusiastically agreed to befriend Saxby. How could Rachel have predicted the two would fall for each other?

Then, Saxby becomes the prime suspect in the murder of his protégé, Paul Becker, whose startling exposé would have upstaged his mentor's research on the painted bunting's prime habitat.

But Saxby's not the only one with a motive to kill Becker. There are the investors waiting for Becker's go-ahead on the golf course development, a family of locals who would do anything to see the trade stopped, and some university colleagues.

To help Dorothy, Rachel works to clear Saxby's name. But then she begins to wonder if - like the painted bunting - Saxby really did kill another male who was encroaching upon his turf.
