Roald Amundsen believes he can triumph over any obstacle. He is a man driven, to the point of self-destruction.

An expedition to Antarctica and a mission to navigate the unconquered North-West passage nearly break Amundsen, both physically and financially.

Amundsen is plagued by inner demons and personal problems, at the same time that the world lionises the explorer.

But there are frontiers still to be conquered.

Despite the danger, despite the sacrifices he must make, Amundsen is determined to be the first man to reach the South Pole.

But he is not the only man driven to make his mark on the world. Amundsen learns of a rival expedition, by the British explorer Captain Scott.

The race is on.

BIPOLAR VOLUME TWO: THE NORTH POLE

Roald Amundsen is the man who beat Captain Scott in the race to the South Pole in 1911.

What is less known is that in the second half of his life Amundsen changed from being a devotee of dogs and skis as the key to successful polar exploration to a man fascinated by the possibilities of the infant science of aviation.

When he flew over the North Pole in 1926 he became the first man to reach both poles.

Meanwhile his inner life was drawing him into a cul-de-sac.

The multiple stresses of his private life coupled with the constant quest for money to finance his expeditions brought him to cracking point.

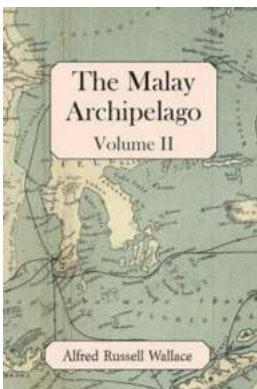

The second volume of Frank McLynn's historical novel reveals Amundsen's sad descent into a dark maelstrom.

Frank McLynn is a British author, biographer, historian and journalist. He is noted for critically acclaimed biographies of Napoleon Bonaparte, Robert Louis Stevenson, Carl Jung, Richard Francis Burton and Henry Morton Stanley.
