A Captivating Encounter in Senegal

During a trade expedition to West Africa, our shipmaster arrived in Senegal, a land teeming with vibrant cultures and abundant natural resources. The warm hospitality and rich history of the region fascinated him, igniting a strong desire to establish closer ties between Senegal and the United States.

The Birth of a Vision

Returning to Boston with newfound perspective, our shipmaster embarked on a mission to promote friendly relations and enhance trade opportunities. His visionary speeches captivated the business community, and his charisma earned him the support of influential figures who shared his belief in the potential of a Senegalese partnership.

The Appointment as First Consul of Senegal

In recognition of his dedication and unwavering commitment, the United States government appointed our shipmaster as the first consul of Senegal. This prestigious position granted him the authority to represent American interests in the region and further strengthened the bond between the two nations.

Fostering Economic Growth and Cultural Exchanges

As the first consul of Senegal, our shipmaster initiated several groundbreaking initiatives. He prioritized the development of trade networks and facilitated the exchange of goods between Senegal and the United States. This contributed to the economic growth of both nations and fostered a cultural exchange that broadened horizons on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Legacy of the New London Shipmaster

Even after his term as consul ended, our shipmaster continued to play a vital role in strengthening Senegal's ties with the United States. His philanthropic endeavors, including the establishment of educational institutions and the preservation of Senegal's cultural heritage, left a lasting impact on both nations.

A Historic Figure Remembered

The first biography of this nineteenth-century sea captain, adventurer, and State Department official: “A vivid picture of [a] unique career.” —The Day (New London, CT)

This is the first biography of Capt. Peter Strickland, a little-known Connecticut Yankee who crossed the Atlantic one hundred times in command of a sailing vessel, traded with French and Portuguese colonies during the period 1864-1905, and served as the first American consul to French West Africa for over twenty years.

We know about Peter Strickland’s long life because he wrote a daily journal from the age of nineteen until the year he died. He broke away from a long line of farmers to adopt a seafaring life at age fifteen, and his merchant marine career led him from the east coast of the United States to the west coast of Africa. He introduced American tobacco and wood products into French and Portuguese colonies, and on the return trips carried animal hides and peanuts in his 100-ton schooners. Eventually, the U.S. State Department asked him to become the first consul in French West Africa, with residence in Senegal. The captain accepted the terms: He would receive no salary, but he could keep the port fees he collected and continue to practice his import-export business.

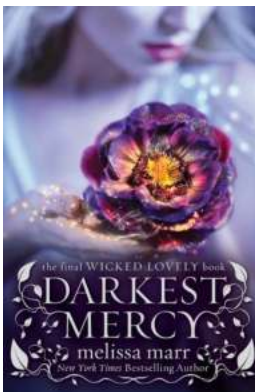

This book tells his life story, from his accomplishments and adventures to coping with the epidemics of the day and a tragic personal loss—in the process capturing a unique era in American diplomatic history.

“Grant’s careful blending of historical hindsight with Strickland’s own words brings enormous value to our understanding of U.S. diplomacy.” —Foreign Service Journal
