“I had carefully learned to understand, about that experience which I could have upon things of rule, how fortune is failing or great, subject to such rule in common, so that otherwise I would have had scant reason to desire such a rule, had I not found myself obliged to it through God’s bidding and nature. Now it was of my acquaintance, that inasmuch as God had let me be born a prince, such as I then am born, then my good and my destruction were knotted into one with the common good; for every reason then, it was now my promise that I should take great pains about their well-being and good governance and management, and thereabout bear close concern.” – Gustavus Adolphus

“Read over and over again the campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Caesar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene, and Frederic,” reads an excerpt from one of Napoleon's memoirs. “This is the only way to become a great general and master the secrets of the art of war.” The “Gustavus” in question is none other than King Gustav II Adolf, widely remembered by the Latinized version of his name, Gustavus Adolphus.
