This book works to be a collection of all Flatwoods Monster Reports, Connections related to the reports and Theories surrounding the monster formed from uncovered information while researching the creature. Three separate reports on the Flatwoods Monster are detailed in this book.

The Flatwoods Monster is a supposed extraterrestrial species of unknown origin that was first encountered in the United States, in the small town of Flatwoods, located in the state of West Virginia. According to eyewitnesses, the Flatwoods

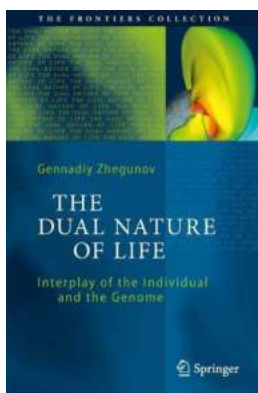

Monster stood at a fully erected height of roughly ten to twelve feet tall. Its face was circular in shape and blood red in color, with bright glowing eyes that projected beams of artificial light similar to an illuminating projection. The head of the creature was reportedly covered in a helmet or shroud which was of a dark color and was described by the witnesses as being the shape of a spade from a deck of cards or like a pointed hood. Its body projected internal sources of light and was concealed underneath a green metallic material that draped down in elongated vertical folds similar to a corrugated metal roof.

The creature is accompanied by a ball of light described as being fifteen to twenty-five feet in diameter, emitting a reddish orange pulsating glow, and possessing no noticeable physical dimensions of any kind. The lack of noticeable physical dimensions could be caused by the craft generating light across its entire surface, making it difficult for eyewitnesses to see clear outlines or physical designs that are obscured by the bright lights. This ball of light is assumed by many of the Flatwoods witnesses to have been capable of flight, although is directly seen in many incidents as being settled on the ground without any notice of flight while the ball of light is in a direct line of sight. The ball of light has also been reported as generating mechanical noises such as loud sizzling or hissing noises occasionally accompanied by sudden squealing or thumping. It has been assumed that the ball of light is a "spaceship" of some unknown origin or design.

Additionally, the Flatwoods Monster demonstrated a peculiar form of locomotion, as the creature possessed no visible feet but instead was reported as hovering above the ground via a soundless form of levitation. When witnesses were close to the vicinity of the Flatwoods Monster or its "Spaceship", they consistently reported a heavy mist that irritated their eyes and noses and caused intense illness and difficulty breathing. A doctor would later claim that the witnesses suffered from the effects of a mustard gas equivalent. When the Flatwoods

Monster approached the witnesses, it released an oily substance that sprayed onto the witnesses with perfect accuracy, coating them in the substance and causing them to flee in terror.

Modern extraterrestrial literature and UFO interpretations surrounding the Flatwoods Monster conclude the creature to have been of biological extraterrestrial origin. Artistic depictions of the Flatwoods Monster recreate the head of the creature as appearing demonic in appearance and its cone-shaped body as appearing to be a science-fiction stylized dress. When looking over the original reports, however, it becomes obvious that the Flatwoods Monster demonstrates traits far more robotic and artificial in nature.
