June is turning eighteen, but her father can't be there. He is excavating the Tomb of the Unknown Princess in Egypt. He sends her a card with a necklace of red jewels instead. When she looks into the mirror she thinks she sees eyes staring at her.

For her birthday her boyfriend, Andy, takes her to the museum to see artifacts from the excavation that her father has sent back from Egypt. She feels drawn to a room that is shut off, not yet open to the public. Andy can't stop her in time. The statue inside stares back at her. Her red eyes light up just as on the necklace. She sighs, "At last, my daughter, you've come home!" June had better figure out what is going on or she might become stone cold dead like the statue soon.
