Unveiling the Severe Style

The Severe Style emerged during the early 5th century BC and lasted until the middle of the century. It is characterized by a sense of seriousness, austerity, and refined simplicity. The artists of this period aimed to portray the idealized human form, emphasizing the beauty of the human body and capturing its essence with precision and restraint.

Expressing Emotion

Despite its name, the Severe Style does not lack emotion. Instead, it captures the restrained and dignified emotions of its subjects. The facial expressions of the sculptures are calm and composed, yet they convey a deep sense of inner strength and determination. This style aimed to epitomize idealized virtues such as self-control, bravery, and order.

Missing Painted Details

While we often perceive ancient sculptures as pristine white marble, they were originally painted in vivid colors. The Severe Style, however, moved away from intricate polychromy and focused on the purity of stone. This decision, in part, adds to the severity of the artworks, leaving their viewers in awe of the remarkable skill required to sculpt such lifelike and compelling figures.

Legacy and Influence

The Severe Style of Ancient Greek Art had a significant influence on the development of later artistic styles. Its pursuit of idealized beauty and its emphasis on harmony and balance laid the foundation for Classical Greek art, which thrived in the subsequent centuries. The impact of this style can still be felt in various art forms today, showcasing the lasting power of Ancient Greek art and its ability to inspire generations.
