The Ingenious Devices of World War II Spies

One of the most iconic gadgets used by World War II spies was the secret hollow coin. These inconspicuous coins could be used to carry microfilm, codes, or even tiny compasses, giving spies an all-in-one tool for their covert operations. Another remarkable gadget was the "escape and evasion" compass. These miniaturized cameras were designed to capture top-secret documents, maps, or other sensitive information discreetly. They had to be small enough to hide within ordinary objects like cigarette cases or even hidden in fake eyeglasses! High-tech for its time, these cameras allowed spies to photograph confidential documents without raising suspicion.
