An Unforgettable Battle Fought During One Of The Darkest Times In History

During World War II, one of the most grueling and devastating battles took place in the heart of Soviet Russia. This captivating guide takes you on a journey through the haunting history of the Siege of Leningrad and its profound impact on World War II and the world.

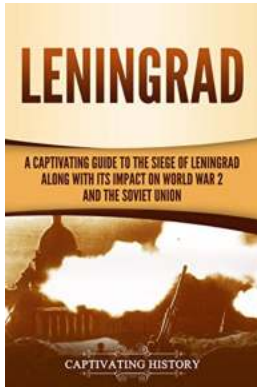

The Prelude To The Siege

As German forces advanced in their quest to conquer the Soviet Union, the city of Leningrad (now St. Petersburg) found itself in imminent danger. Hitler's ultimate goal was to capture the city and starve its residents into submission. What followed was a battle that would test the limits of human resilience.

The Harsh Reality Of Life Under Siege

With the city cut off from the rest of the world, Leningrad's inhabitants faced unimaginable hardships. Food supplies rapidly dwindled, resulting in widespread starvation. People resorted to eating anything they could find, including rats, pets, and even leather. The bitter Russian winter made survival even more challenging, claiming countless lives due to freezing temperatures.

From the early fall of 1941 until the winter of 1944, the Soviet city of Leningrad (today's St. Petersburg) was almost completely surrounded by the forces of Nazi Germany and Finland. Though the siege lasted just under 900 days, to the citizens of the Soviet Union (and Russia today), this event is referred to as the "900-Day Siege."

In those 900 Days, the losses sustained by the Soviet Union were greater than the losses of Great Britain (est. 450,000) and the United States (est. 415,000) combined for the entire duration of the war. The losses in Leningrad (both civilian and military) amounted to over one million deaths, according to American military historian David Glantz. Other estimates reach the same general .

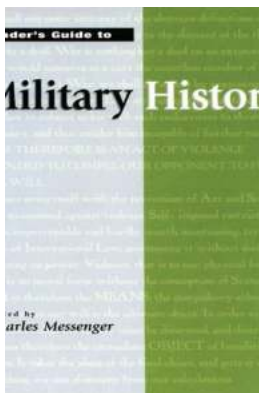

These one million victims of the Nazi siege did not only fall to Nazi bullets, bombs, and shells. The men, women, and children of Leningrad died in a variety of other ways as well, most of them exceedingly unpleasant, such as disease, starvation, and suicide. And, despite the propaganda from both sides, Russians are just as susceptible to cold weather as anyone else, especially when fuel runs out and there is not enough adequate clothing to go around.
