When Edith Parker's father, Jacob, dies, she stands to inherit his half share in the successful general store he owns with business partner Malcolm Rogers. There is just one problem... Edith can only inherit if she is a married woman.

Edith believes Malcolm has had a hand in twisting her father's mind, and her thoughts are confirmed when he is the one to offer his hand in marriage, knowing full well that he will become the sole owner of Parker's Mercantile Store.

Disgusted by Malcolm's underhand ways Edith sets off into the unknown and find a life for herself away from his evil clutches.

What will become of her? Will she ever be able to reclaim her rightful inheritance, or will the despicable Malcolm Rogers keep hold of what rightfully belongs to Edith?

Or, will a chance encounter on a stagecoach headed West be the solution to all of Edith's problems?
