Leah Samson is desperate to escape her life at the local saloon where she works in Fulton, Missouri. She is fed up with being groped and leered at by the seedy and downright dishonest clientele.

She wants out by any means she can, and when Titus Anders, a friend of her low-life imprisoned brothers, offers to set her up with Wes Broden, Marshal of Piney County, Arizona she doesn't think twice.

Leah jumps at the chance of being safely married to a good, decent man like Wes.

The only problem is, when she arrives in Florence, Arizona, she starts second-guessing herself.

Surely her crime-seeking brothers have ulterior motives for wanting her married off so quickly — and to a U.S. Marshal, no less.

After some gentle persuasion from Wes, she swallows down any misgivings and decides to go ahead with the wedding, settling blissfully into a happily married life.

Only then does the reason for her marriage become clear. Her brothers want retribution for Wes' part in sending them to jail.

Can Wes keep Leah safe from the harm her brothers intend to put her through and in doing so can they cement their relationship?

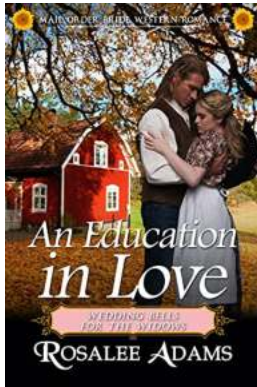

Will Leah be able to prevent her brothers from exacting revenge on the good marshal?
