Inside the Grueling Selection Process

Joining Army Special Forces isn't a walk in the park. With less than 4% of candidates successfully completing the grueling selection process, only the most exceptional soldiers earn the coveted Green Beret. The selection process comprises physical endurance tests, psychological evaluations, and extensive training modules designed to assess a candidate's aptitude for operating in high-stress environments.

The Path to Becoming an Army Special Forces Soldier

Before a soldier can earn the distinctive Green Beret, they must first complete Basic Combat Training (BCT) and Advanced Individual Training (AIT). Following these initial steps, the candidate progresses to the Special Forces Assessment and Selection (SFAS) – a physically and mentally demanding evaluation process.
