From ancient Rome to the Renaissance and beyond, political agents have utilized their power to shape historical accounts. We will explore specific instances where this manipulation has occurred and how it still affects our understanding of ancient history today.

2. The Lost Chronicles: Rediscovering Ancient Texts and Authentic Sources

One of the biggest challenges in reconstructing ancient history is the scarcity of reliable sources. Throughout time, countless ancient texts have been lost, destroyed, or deliberately suppressed.

However, recent advancements in archaeology and textual analysis have allowed us to uncover hidden manuscripts, decode ancient languages, and verify the authenticity of existing sources. We will delve into these groundbreaking discoveries that shed new light on ancient civilizations, dispelling myths and exposing the truth behind historical inaccuracies.

3. Debunking the Misattributed Tales: Correcting Mistakes and False Connections

Over the years, numerous legends and tales have been wrongly attributed to ancient civilizations, often leading to misleading interpretations. Whether it be the misidentification of artifacts or the conflation of different cultures, these mistakes have contributed to a distorted understanding of our past.

Through meticulous research and interdisciplinary collaboration, experts have managed to unravel these misconceptions, rectifying misattributions, and providing a clearer picture of the ancient world. We will uncover some of the most notorious false connections and reveal the truth behind them.

4. The Ancient Technology Enigma: Acknowledging Advanced Ancient Civilizations

It is a common belief that ancient civilizations were primitive compared to our modern world. However, mounting evidence suggests that these ancient societies possessed sophisticated knowledge and advanced technologies far beyond our comprehension.

From the precision of ancient architectural marvels to unexplained engineering feats and hidden mathematical principles, we will explore the astonishing achievements of ancient peoples. Get ready to be amazed as we expose these mind-boggling mysteries and shed light on the suppressed technological advancements of our past.

5. Rediscovering Lost Civilizations: Opening the Doors to Forgotten Worlds

Ancient history is not just about the well-known civilizations of Egypt, Greece, or Rome. Countless other cultures and empires have flourished and thrived, leaving behind captivating stories and remarkable legacies.

However, due to various factors such as geographical isolation, destruction, or deliberate omission, these lesser-known civilizations have remained hidden from mainstream historical narratives. We will embark on a captivating journey to unravel the forgotten chapters of human history, bringing to light the remarkable achievements of civilizations lost to time.

: Unveiling the Hidden Truth and Reclaiming Ancient History

As we conclude our exposé on the modern falsification of ancient history, it becomes evident that we have only scratched the surface of these complex narratives. The distortion and manipulation of our past not only hinder the accurate understanding of our roots but also perpetuate misconceptions and hinder cultural appreciation.

By questioning prevailing beliefs, embracing interdisciplinary research, and challenging established notions, we can work towards correcting the falsified perceptions and reclaiming the truth about our ancient history. Together, let us unravel the real stories and uncover the awe-inspiring wonders of our past.

Of What Race Were The Ancient Egyptians? A Brief Guide To Correcting The Modern Falsification Of Ancient History And To Implementing The Scientific, Historical, And Cultural Legacy Of Cheikh Anta Diop

By Alexander Otis Matthews

A modern exploration of the issues concerning the race of the ancient Egyptians as revealed from the work of noted egyptologist Cheikh Anta Diop, and a practical guide to implementing his legacy for Africans and blacks throughout the diaspora. The direct testimony of the classical authors of European antiquity is examined and brought to bear on the subject. Less

The ancient Egyptian civilization made seminal contributions to the world in science, math, astronomy, religion, philosophy, and engineering, among other fields, that modern man still struggles to explain. Critically, the ancient Egyptians were careful to leave a record of their astounding achievements in the form of monuments, elaborate tombs and sarcophagi, art, and papyri illustrating complex mathematical and engineering formulas. When Europeans first "discovered" the remains left by the ancient Egyptians, Europe and America were in the midst of the Atlantic Slave Trade and all of that trade's theories about the white race's superiority and primacy to all other races, with a focus on the black race as being inferior and primitive, without a history to speak of.

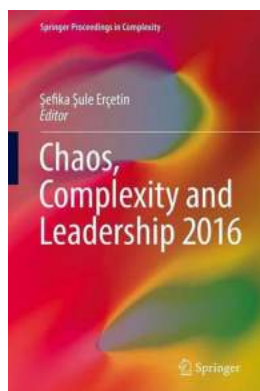

Therefore, while the fact of ancient Egypt being a black civilization was such common knowledge in the ancient world that the issue was never raised, those Europeans who became egyptologists in the early 1800s could not attribute this highest of civilizations to a race they had declared savage and subhuman. From that point onwards, all European and Western egyptologist made it their primary goal to deny that ancient Egypt had been a black civilization. They would proceed to devise all types of racial theories to support their invented version of history, calling the ancient Egyptians dark-skinned whites, arabs, asians, and any number of other terms meant to obfuscate the truth. When all else failed, they simply declared that the ancient Egyptians were such a mixture of races that the concept of race cannot be applied to them. These types of theories still abound in the internet and in European and American scholarship about ancient Egypt.

In the 1950s a young student from Senegal showed such promise in physics that he left Senegal to go to Paris to further his studies in the field. That young man, Cheikh Anta Diop, eventually developed a keen interest in African history, specifically the study of ancient Egypt. He chose as his thesis for his doctorate from the University of Paris the subject of ancient Egypt as a black civilization that forms the foundation of the black race's history in the same manner as the ancient Greek civilization does for the white race. In the course of developing his thesis Diop would become proficient in the fields of world history, prehistory, archeology, anthropology, linguistics, and sociology. Initially the University of Paris roundly rejected his thesis. Diop did not wilt under that initial rejection, and after two more attempts over a period of ten years, he would finally prevail on his argument after bringing enough objective and honest historians, archaeologists, and anthropologist to accompany him to appear before the committee and support the truth of his argument.

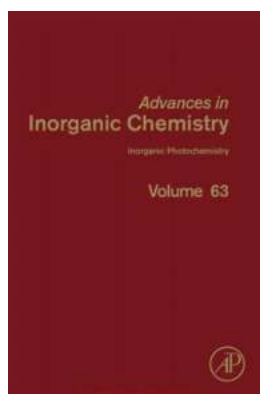

The methods Diop used to carry his thesis were ingenious. To wit, the records of history don't lie, and he meticulously researched the ancient record of Europe's own classical authors and thinkers from Antiquity, many of whom studied in Egypt and were contemporaries of the ancient Egyptians, and used their testimony to confirm his argument. From the mouths of Strabo, Aristotle, Diodorus of Sicily, and Herodotus himself, Europe's own Father of History, came the truth that had been obscured for the past few centuries.
